Use of 'Cookies'

When you visit our site, we may plant a "cookie" in your computer. A "cookie" does not enable us to identify you. Generally, it records information about the way your computer navigates round our site (which pages you looked at, date and time, etc.) which we can read next time you visit. It contains information which you have given us. In this way, you will not have to fill in the form the next time you visit the site. This information will be stored on your computer for a defined period of time. We hereby inform you that you can prevent "cookies" from being recorded by configuring your browser as follows: If you surf the Internet with Internet Explorer 3 or 4 (Microsoft): Click on "display", "options", "advanced". Among the various warnings that you can activate, the fourth says "warn before accepting cookies" and in Internet Explorer 4 only, the fifth says "always refuse cookies".

We use third-party advertising companies to serve ads on sites on which we advertise. Third-party advertising technology (1) uses information derived from your visits to this Web site and the sites on which we advertise to serve ads to you and (2) places a unique third-party cookie or cookies on your browser. We also use Web beacons, provided by third-party advertising companies, on both our Web site and on other sites, to help manage and optimize our online advertising. Web beacons enable us to recognize a browser's cookie when a browser visits this site and to learn which banner ads bring users to our Web site. Cookies and Web beacons also enable us to deliver more relevant ads to users. To "opt-out," please click here.

Although we believe that each of the sites to which we target our ads or from which we otherwise collect data should post a privacy statement that fully describes the advertising and data collection activities on its site, we cannot guarantee that all of those sites post such a statement.
